

Note to Nerds April 19th 2019

Procrastinator's Edition

Brief Note Yet Unsatisfactory Note

As things turned out, this past week was amazingly productive.

I have this list of "To Do's" when I start the week that I pass off to my son Andrew. At the end of the week he holds me accountable. I have found this to be particularly helpful because at times I can rationalize with myself why things did or did not get done.

"As soon as I text, IM, tweet, and update my status to 'getting right down to it,' I'll get right down to it."

But he's quite brutal in his honesty, which is something I've come to appreciate. When I miss a mark, or I fail to complete a task, he is persistent in asking me why I was unable to finish the job and how I can do better.

This past week he and I did not have our sit-down meeting like we normally do on Sunday afternoons. I can tell you that he is going to really drive home the fact that I missed getting out the newsletter this past week.

And the answer will be a very poor one ... but I had more "to do's" than I had week.

I hope your week is able to contain all your "to do's".

And I hope it's a happy one!

Peter